Governor Promises Water
In Antelope Valley Talk

Feather River Directors in Two-Day Meet

Gov. Goodwin J. Knight promised to fight for water for Antelope Valley in his speech prepared for delivery to the residents last night at the Four Winds grounds in Lancaster.

"Your needs for future water are being and will be given fullest consideration and I assure you that these needs will be met as funds are made available for bringing supplemental water into Southern California."

That was the point of the visit of the Governor's speech which was delivered at an open-air meeting at the Earle Theater in Lancaster, organized by the Antelope Valley Water Users Association. The speaker is shown at the right of the photo.

Knight was seated as honored guest at a dinner in the Hotel Hall for water directors and talk in front of the Four Winds grounds, Lancaster.

In his prepared speech, he emphasized that the cost of the state's water development must be met by a federal and state amendment before the state can secure the necessary federal and state funds.

The governor's speech was followed by a question-and-answer session.

Antelope Valley's wildflowers picked up in its fields this year seems a more diverse than in past years. The same early bloomers showed off the way to a warmer and sunny stretch this week.

Last Thursday, Old Dad Win was at the location for a party that nearly isolated the Antelope Valley. Roads were closed and required that virtually all valley exits.

Electricity was cut off in commonwealth last Thursday for a tosoar.
