High Desert Cities Officials Briefed on Impact of Airport

The development of the Palmabla Intercontinental Airport will have a major impact on the cities of the High Desert, according to the councilman. The airport will be located near Palmabla, California, and is expected to bring significant economic benefits to the area.

California City Mayor James Riley, at the conclusion of the meeting, suggested that the group meet periodically in the future. He said that additional input from the council will be important in shaping the airport's development.

The meeting was also attended by representatives from the Los Angeles Department of Airports, and the California Regional Planning Council.

Palmabla Mayor Larry Chimaio, invited representatives of the cities of Adelanto, Victorville, and Palmdale, to discuss the airport's impact on their communities. Nearly 60 people participated in the meeting.

In opening the program, Chimaio suggested that the group discuss:

- Vehicle Fees
- Division Brings

Palmabla $15

With funds distributed according to population, the first assignment of more vehicle license fees for fiscal year 1982 is expected to bring $31,500,000 to the City of Palmabla. Additional revenue is expected to be generated from the airport's development.
